Bluefin tuna (kuro-maguro or hon-maguro)
2018.3.12 450 kg catch
Heaviest catch at the Katsuura Fish Market
Also known as the “Black Diamond,” the Bluefin tuna is synonymous with high-grade tuna, but its fishing output is small. It is a top-grade fish that can be caught in waters near Japan, the Atlantic Ocean, and the Mediterranean Sea.

Big-eye tuna (mebachi-maguro, bachi, or daruma)
Its name is derived from its perfectly round large eyes. It is used for sashimi. Most tuna fishing is done in comparatively warmer areas of the sea. Big-eye tuna comprises most of the sushi that Japanese people eat.

Yellowfin tuna (kihada-maguro, or kiwada)
Yellowfin tuna (kihada-maguro, or kiwada) are tuna with a slightly yellow colored skin. Their meat is pink, so there is no distinction between the tuna belly and red flesh. As there is little change in their skin color, they are often used in canned food and fish sausages, in addition to sashimi.

Albacore (binnaga-maguro, binchou or tonbo)
Albacore (binnaga-maguro, binchou or tonbo) are the smallest species of tuna with the longest pectoral fins. The characteristic softness of tonbo sashimi makes it the most popular for local dinner tables.
